Past I, which was be regarded as introductory to the narrative that follows, records a six months experience on board an American whaler.

Farts II and III, containing the more material subjects of this narrative, give a graphic description of a free-and-casy life at the Sandwick, the Georgian and Society Islands. Glowing descriptions of romantic scenery, rambles through paim groves, yaching among isles, corolines from reefs and lagoons, evergreen valleys, anow-cappe monatans and volcanoes, transport, in imagination, the reader to the same skies and sweet-scented gales of the tropics. Points of character have been sketched in bold outline, and the lights and shadows of Polynesian life are vivoly portrayed, embracing the fessia and practimes of the natives, their hattice, mythology, and all fessia and practimes of the natives, their hattice, mythology, and all fessia and practimes of the natives, their hattice, mythology, and all fessia and practimes of the natives of seemi-barberic life. An interesting chapter on Missions has also been appended; and though the whole plot is presented in a fascinating dress, it will be found choice alike in sectiment in diction. It is believed therefore, that in connection with the Appendix and Illustrations, it will prove a valuable addition to our literature of the Pacific.

With respect to the Appendix, its first portion is "A Glance at the Present Condition of Polycessa," exhibiting in a concise form, the Present Condition—Resources and Relations with the Civilized Capsific of the Natives—Their Habits and Language—Government and Social Condition—Resources and Relations with the Civilized World, and Steam Navigation of the Pacific.

Appendix III—The Island Kingdom of the North Pacific.

Appendix III—The French in the Pacific.

This work is the life of a poer rope-maser and his daughter, straggling against poverty and misfortune. The daughter is beautiful, modest and captivating. Bir Edward Lee, the great man of the book, notwithstanding wife and daughters, falls in love with Ellien Giles, and concocts a plan to carry the unwilling maid away. To do this he employs a villan, with whose real character he is unhappily unacquainted, and who wishes the destruction of the girl out of moanacquainted, and who who had a rejected suiter. There are plots and counterplots, in which the rope-maker and unsuspecting daught ter are the victima. The defineations of character are excellent Ben Burst, Mine Host of Fallow Deer Inn, the Gipsey encampment and Jeal the Gipecy's daughter, are all drawn to life. The book ends, as all such books should, in the happiness of the principal characters.

There are some tragedies; and the here, Walter Northcot, a little

The Great Red Drad Red On;

Or, The Mysters Key to Poyery.

By Astrony Gavin.

Formerly one of the Roman Catholic Priests of Saragossa, Spain.

"And behold a Great Red Dragon, having seven heads and tenhous." etc.—Rev. xii.

Comprising a complete history of Popery; giving a full account of all the customs of the Priests and Frairs, and the Rites and Caremonies of the Popels trilighou; to which is adoed an account of the laquision at Goa; the Inquisition at Macernat; a Preserventive against Pupery; a Summary of the Roman Catholic Faith; and a nonner of suiteralisted Excommunications proclaimed by the Pope at sundry time says inst well-known European personages.

Also Estripanion of Heretics, and Notes, giving a statement of the Power and Prospects of the Papal Church in the United States.

"A great book. It contains a graphic description of the abominations of the Papal Romain Church in past age, and down to the present time; and is a timely warming to all Americans to beware of The Great Red Dragon's of the Apocalype, as seen in vision by the Apontie Julius on the Isles of Patmos. It ducloses scenes which every percus should now."

"Thus book eximes in good time. Every one should read it. Historically it is of very great value. It gives us much light on a very dark subject, and, what is rather cinquiar, some matters never before in print or the public's mind any way. Gavin saw what he describes, was an actor in the scenes for twenty years. Heace its athericity.
